In September and October of 1991, Joe (through his chairmanship of the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee) feverishly investigated[1285] allegations that Clarence Thomas was sexually inappropriate with Anita Hill, a then-35-year-old former aide to Thomas. However, in spite of his deceased son's eponymous foundation, which was supposedly dedicated to the "Protection of Children," Joe seemed less interested in getting to the bottom of Hallie's allegations, even though they concerned an adult male—namely, his son Hunter—being "sexually inappropriate" with Joe's then-minor granddaughter.
